Access Statement for Millennium Point

Millennium Point is situated between Curzon Street and Jennens Road in Birmingham's Eastside. The building is approached by pedestrian routes with flat access and serviced by a neighbouring multi-storey car park that has disabled parking spaces and EV charging points. This is managed by Birmingham City Council.

Once inside Millennium Point on Level 0, there is flat access to public toilets, meeting spaces, tenants and the reception. There are escalators and 2 passenger lifts to all floors. The entrance to Thinktank, the science museum, is accessed via Level 0 and is flat.

If accessing Millennium Point from the multi-storey car park (owned and operated by Birmingham City Council), then flat access to the building is on Level 1 and Level 2.

Once inside on Level 1 there is flat access to all meeting spaces and passenger lifts to all floors.

Once inside on Level 2 there is flat access to public toilets, all meeting spaces, the café and passenger lifts to all floors.

For pedestrians accessing Millennium Point from Jennens Road, flat entry is into Level 2 of the building.

On all levels of the building, walkways are flat and generous.

We aim to make our meeting and conference spaces as accessible as possible. Each of these offer flat door thresholds and access to toilets.

In an emergency situation, the Fire Assembly Point is in Eastside City Park, immediately outside the front of the building. The fire alarm has spoken instructions, audible alarms and strobe lighting. The building has disabled refuge points on all floors, with a direct talk link to the Security Control Room. There are evacuation chairs on all escape staircases and during public opening times, there is always a trained member of staff on site.

Millennium Point aims to be accessible to all and takes the responsibility for the experience of our guests very seriously. If you require further information, please contact facilities@millenniumpoint.org.uk
